SMDC's Urias, Gentle paying visit to Kwaj

By Jim Bennett
Editor

SMDC's new brigadier general is scheduled to arrive on-island today for his first visit since his Feb. 5, appointment to the post.

Brig. Gen. John M. Urias is the deputy commanding general for Acquisition and director, Space and Missile Defense Acquisition Center, taking over for Brig. Gen. Steven Flohr, who went on to command White Sands Missile Range in N.M., in 1999.

Brig. Gen. John M. Urias

As the deputy commanding general, Urias is part of the chain of command from Col. Curtis L. Wrenn Jr., USAKA/KMR commander, extending through Urias and up to Lt. Gen. John Costello, SMDC commanding general.

"I look forward to working for and with Brig. Gen. Urias," said Wrenn. "He is a soldier with a great reputation."

Besides Kwajalein, Urias also oversees the Army Space Program Office, the Joint Land Attack Cruise Missile Defense Elevated Netted Sensor System Project Office, Ballistic Missile Targets Joint Project Office and High

Spring cleaning coming March 24

By Peter Rejcek
Associate Editor

Time to get dirty by cleaning up.

A special cleanup day is scheduled for Saturday, March 24, with an emphasis on both industrial and residential areas, according to Joe Loer, Solid Waste manager.

"The cleanup is USAKAwide," Loer said, adding that Kwajalein, Roi-Namur, Meck and the other islands under USAKA are to receive a spring cleaning.

Added 1st Sgt. Tony Burford, "The command wants to put an emphasis on the community service buildings, to make sure they're clean inside and out."

A memo from RSE Facilities Support Division on behalf of USAKA is being distributed to all contractors, organizations and groups with facilities. That's everyone from Boeing to Bank of Guam to the Job Corps. Organizations like the Kwajalein Yacht Club and the Roi-Namur Dolphins Scuba Club are also being asked to participate and pick up their areas, Loer said.

"The commander is saying, 'I want everyone to clean up,'" he explained. "Your area is your responsibility."

Burford said the commander, Col. Curtis L. Wrenn Jr., will conduct a tour of facilities that day to ensure areas are being cleaned.

Any kind of material or waste is being collected, from shops, offices, stores and warehouses. Loer said groups or individuals who want to "adopt" an open area, such as a group of kids who will work around the CAC, are welcome to do so.

RSE collection crews will work on Kwajalein and Roi throughout the day on Saturday. Items should be set out in normal collection areas or be marked for removal.

Did I really say that? Must have been someone else

Did I really say that?

It's been a week of nostalgia, as I was contacted by not one but two old friends through the wonderfully infinite microcosm we call the Internet. And, no, they're not geckos — but don't hold that against them.

One friend, in particular, expressed surprise that she was able to track me down, particularly because I responded through e-mail. Apparently, at one point, she reminded me, "you thought the Internet would lead to a breakdown of society."

Did I really say that? I'm still no techno-geek — somehow all my Outlook settings recently got rearranged and I still haven't figured out how to put them back; the dates are displayed in Swedish — but I've acquiesced to the computer age. And just yesterday I threw out my old abacus and bought a calculator. Now, I'm saving up my money for one of those fancy TI 99-4A computers.

Of course, I guess that's not the first time I've had to download and delete my words.

Right after high school, there was an Army recruiter who must have been behind on his quota for the month, because he called me every other day, trying to get me to join. Finally, I told him, "There's no way I'll ever work for the Army."

Did I really say that?

Around the same time period, I remember driving around with an older cousin. We were jamming out to some righteous heavy metal, and he told me that someday I would be listening to something else besides the soulful tunes of Metallica, Slayer and Ozzy.

"No way, dude," was my stinging rebuttal at the time.

Today, you couldn't find a Metallica CD in my collection. Ozzy's still there, but, then again, his music has been co-opted for TV commercials. (Did anyone else notice that "Crazy Train," an ode to cocaine, is being used to sell cars?)

I mean I'm sure that a long time ago Ozzy Osbourne probably scoffed at the guy who told him, "You're going to stop biting the heads off of bats, and partying so hard that you're rushed to the emergency room every other month."

Today, Ozzy's sober, a father, still fairly incoherent, but performing duets that seem more heavy elevator music than heavy metal. He even wears suits.

My own wardrobe and behavior have certainly changed over the years. I've traded in my black metal T-shirts for Jimmy Buffett Aloha formal ware, have a steady girlfriend and the only time I bang my head is on the boat when coming up from a dive.

Hmmm: It looks like the Oz Man and I are losing our rebellious attitudes — or are we just acquiring better taste?

Did I really just say that?

MC Potts rocks Kwajalein with a little country

By Jim Bennett
Editor

Music has taken country singer MC Potts from an Ohio ranch around the world and finally to Kwajalein.

After hitting the charts in 1996 with her hits "Back When" and "Put Me Out of My Misery," she began a Mediterranean tour of Navy bases. Since then, she's hit all the services, most recently on a 2000 tour in the Middle East, landing in Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Kuwait, to name a few. She had planned to come to Kwajalein that year.

"We were so disappointed we didn't get to go [to Kwajalein]," she said.

Now having arrived on island, she said, "It's so beautiful and so different."

Potts played the atoll circuit this weekend, with performances at Roi-Namur's Outrigger Club and Kwajalein's Gilligan's and Emon Beach.

"Any live entertainment out here is good, but she was a cut above the rest," said Todd Chumbley, who two-stepped most of Sunday night at the club and returned to the beach for the afternoon performance.

She opened with songs from her latest CD "Straight To You," and closed with her 1997 hit, "I'm Sorry I Didn't Leave You Sooner."

"She's very good," said Jamie Zucker, who also attended both shows.

Fans agreed the country music made for a nice change from the pop and island bands that have come to the island most recently, and she seemed to attract more than country fans.

MC Potts signs an autograph for Delaina Klinger during Monday's Emon Beach show.

But Potts said she doesn't think much about "crossover" music, the popular tunes that start out with country stars and end up on pop charts.

"A good song is a good song, and it will cross over," she said. "How it's produced determines what category it will go into. You wouldn't put a lot of steel guitars and fiddles in a pop song, for example."

Potts leaves Kwajalein today to continue on her Pacific tour, with stops in Guam, Japan and Korea.

Retired spook says Russia has own NMD

(Wall Street Journal, [Opinion, Melanie Kirkpatrick] March 6, 2001) Bad treaties are bound to be violated. Curiously, in all the current talk about the ABM Treaty ... no one seems to be talking about violations anymore. Which is why it's a good time to take a look at the work of William T. Lee.

Mr. Lee is a retired spook. Along the way, having pieced together information from memoirs and recently declassified material, Mr. Lee says he has discovered hard evidence of something the U.S. long suspected but was never able to prove: Russia already has a national missile defense that was started by the Soviets even before the ABM Treaty took effect.

Russia has continued to modernize the NMD system over the past decade, he adds. If true, all this would make a mockery of the ABM Treaty.

It would also make a mockery of Russian President Vladimir Putin's call for President Bush to abandon his plan to build a national missile defense. Mr. Putin can hardly denounce an American defense when Russia has one of its own.

NMD could cost $100B

(Defense Daily, March 8, 2001) An expanded national missile defense (NMD) program to include land-, sea- and space-based systems could cost $100 billion over 10 years, according to an analysis of the Bush FY02 budget by Rep. John Spratt (D-SC), ranking member of the House Budget Committee.

"It is a virtual certainty that the defense budget as proposed has insufficient funds to meet the budget's stated and ambitious ballistic missile defense goals," according to Spratt.

Rumsfeld quits distinguishing between national, theater missile defense

System would protect United States, allies from rogue nations

By Jim Garamone

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, March 9, 2001 — Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has stopped differentiating between National Missile Defense and Theater Missile Defense.

Rumsfeld, speaking with NATO Secretary-General George Robertson at a March 8 joint press conference in the Pentagon, said tagging the missile defense effort as either theater or national is "unuseful."

"What's 'national' depends on where you live, and what's 'theater' depends on where you live," he said.

The Bush administration has called for a missile defense system to defend all 50 states. The Ballistic Missile Defense Organization is working on such a system. At the same time, BMDO and the services are working on systems that would intercept ballistic missile attacks on deployed U.S. forces.

"Obviously, if you prevent such an attack against U.S. forces in an area, you also defend the civilian population of the area," a DoD official said. "That might be theater missile defense for American forces, but it's national missile defense for that country."

Rumsfeld said he is interested in negating the threat of rogue states launching missiles armed with weapons of mass destruction at the United States or its allies. "The United States has friends and allies with whom we're linked very tightly to," he said.

Bush administration officials have characterized the launch of such a weapon — or the threat of a launch — as the ultimate expression of terror, blackmail and aggression.

"I feel that we are approaching (missile defense) in a rational way by avoiding something that could create significant differentials in vulnerabilities (between the United States and its allies)," Rumsfeld said.

"Over time," he said, "it's every bit as important to us to be able to defend this piece of real estate and our population in this location as it is to defend our deployed forces and to have our allies feel equally secure to the extent that's possible."

BQ residents support using recycling program ...

Cleanup on Meck should be finished by that Friday.

Everyone is asked to segregate recoverable wastes, like wood, metal, electronics, aluminum cans and glass bottles, from trash. Items should be bagged or loose materials tied together. Hazardous waste pickup must be scheduled in advance of collection by calling the RSE Environmental office at 51134.

The last islandwide cleanup was held in July of last year. Loer said these types of programs are not yet on a set schedule, but they are growing with each occurrence. Burford said a second cleanup day is scheduled in the fall.

Solid Waste's recycling also continues to grow and evolve, with about 50 percent of waste being recovered, according to Loer.

"It's grown to almost 4,500 tons per year," he said, adding that recycling levels have doubled over the last three years. That level is well above the 30 percent benchmark stateside and five years ahead of the Department of Defense's goal, according to Loer.

"We passed that [goal] last year," Loer added. "It's a mature program now ... Cost effectively, it's hard to go much further without more support from island residents."

But Solid Waste is hoping to capture more recyclables following a survey of BQ residents that found 70 percent of respondents are willing to make use of containers in their rooms. About 25 percent, 133 of 545 surveyed, responded to the questionnaire.

Just over half of those who responded said they already recycle, and most willing to recycle would collect both aluminum cans and glass bottles.

"The BQs are the single largest area we have not targeted," Loer said, adding that he expected to have six- and 10-gallon containers for the rooms available by mid-summer, along with larger containers in common trash areas. As money becomes available, he said the larger containers will also be set at BQ building entrances.

"We'll try to make it as convenient as possible," he said, adding that cardboard and metal recyclables will also be targeted.

While the island recycling program is going strong, Loer said he would like to see more participation from the residential side. About 90 percent of industrial recyclables, like metal and wood, are recovered, but only 25 percent of aluminum and glass is saved from the incinerator and landfill. For example, that's more than two million aluminum cans — 75 percent — going into the ground every year, Loer noted.

"We'd like to push [residential recycling] up above 50 percent, to like 75 percent," he said. "We should be able to beat national standards, since we're on this small island." Nationwide, aluminum can and bottle recycling hovers around 50 to 55 percent, Loer said.

For more information about the islandwide cleanup or the recycling program, call Dawn Gramos at 51135 or Charlie Heath at 52265 on Kwajalein, Ken "Hondo" Irving at 56093 on Roi-Namur, or Kelly Furgeson at 57105 on Meck. Loer can also be contacted at 51165.

SMDC VIPs to visit range, Wake Island ...

Energy Laser Systems Test Facility. He also heads contracting activity for the command.

Though new to the posting, Urias isn't new to the missile business. In 1975, after graduating from the University of California — Davis as a distinguished military graduate, he was commissioned a second lieutenant in air defense. He went on to command a number of air defense units including 2nd Battalion, 44th Air Defense Artillery of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

But most recently, since Sept. 10, 1999, he served as the program executive officer, Air and Missile Defense, where he managed the Army's Theater Air and Missile Defense programs in addition to several cooperative development programs for the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization and the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Urias brings with him on this trip Dr. Linda Gentle, who is the deputy director of Space and Missile Defense Acquisition Center. Gentle has held that position since November 1998, and served as acting director from October 1999 until Urias' appointment.

As guest speaker for the Women's History Luncheon this Friday (noon, at the Yokwe Yuk Club), Gentle's speech will focus on the importance of mentoring younger and less experienced people, to develop them as tomorrow's leaders. Reservations for that luncheon may be made by calling 58909.

The two are set to remain on Kwajalein through the week, touring the range, visiting Meck and flying to Wake Island for a day.

Sanna (Enniburr) Cholera Clinic to be held for RMC Budget workers.

A Cholera Clinic at Roi Namur Use Security check point will be held on Saturday, March 17, 2001 for all RMC budget workers. Hours will be from 0600 - 1700 (5PM). Any RMC budget workers wishing to obtain the oral vaccine should get out or drink anything (including water) 1 hour before or after receiving the vaccine.

Those who should not take the vaccine are the following condition:

- active diarrhea if needed fever
- pregnant
- heart feeling
- or if you have taken antibiotics within the last two days.

A one time dose of the oral cholera vaccine gives immunity for approximately 6 months. For questions call Bess Buchanan PA-C at 52224

See you at the movies!Saturday*Treasure of Matecumbe (G)

This Disney adventure chronicles two boys' search for buried treasure somewhere in the Florida Keys during the mid 1800s. The children are assisted by three adults, who each have their own agendas for finding the cache. The hunters are followed by a greedy gang of villains. (Peter Ustinov, Jane Wyatt) (117 minutes)

Lucky Numbers (R, New Release)

A weatherman on a local TV station, who also sells snowmobiles on the side, is having a lousy winter, thanks to unusually warm weather. But things really start to heat up when he hatches a plot to rig the state lottery with the help of his girlfriend and his friends. The plan is foolproof — except for all the fools involved. (John Travolta, Lisa Kudrow, Ed O'Neill, Bill Pullman, Chris Kattan) (105 minutes)

Yokwe Yuk Theater, 8 p.m.

Unbreakable (New Release, PG-13)

David Dunne is taking a train ride from New York City back home to Philadelphia when the train jumps the tracks and collides with an oncoming engine, leaving David as the only survivor. In fact, not only is he alive, but he's unscathed. Puzzled, David soon encounters a mysterious stranger who tells him about "unbreakable" people who have remarkable endurance and courage. (Bruce Willis, Samuel L. Jackson, Robin Wright Penn) (107 minutes)
